Democrats Busy on Garden Island.

The Democrats are gaining strength on the Island of Kauai, according to the following editorial warning from the Garden Island, which says:

The business community is probably thankful for every day that the beginning of the actual campaign is delayed, but signs indicate that the day of action is very close at hand if not already begun.

So far the Democrats are the only ones who have made any sign of activity here on Kauai. During last campaign the party had no organization here, but it has evidently made up its mind not to be caught in that predicament again. When McClanahan made his lighting campaign of the island, he didn't stop to do much organizing, but he left the impression among many of the followers of the Home Rule banner that perhaps the Democratic precinct lists offered a shorter road to office and emoluments than the one that were graced by their names, and these same ex-Home Rulers will be heard from in the coming campaign.

The Republicans have had things very much their own way on this island and it must be admitted that they have used the opportunity offered by their power to the benefit of the whole community. They expect probably to be in undisputed control for another two years, but it might be that the question of control may become more of an issue than is expected and it would therefore be in the line of good policy to get up and do a little hustling in order to draw the vacillating mind over in the camp of the party that has stood for good and economical administration of Kauai's affairs.

Public Teaching Day at Normal School.

The purpose of the public teaching day at the Normal School is to show the cadets actually at work. The training teacher sees that the cadet has the subject matter and shows her how to present it. If she fails in the presentation of the work the training teacher corrects her at the time so that the pupils do not suffer from any mistake on her part. This is the idea of the school.

The work in the Normal School is divided into three subjects, viz.: nature study, story work, leading to history, and number work, as far as possible based on the other two. Reading, spelling, and writing are grouped around the story work and are incidental to it.

Nature study includes geography, physiology, insects, plants, etc. The pupils go out and make collections, which they preserve in aquariums and insect cases. The life process is watched and the insect is studied in its relation to man. In grade I the map was studied through its several stages the proper geographical background of a piece of literature.

In the history department the lesson was on the School County. The period is about past when individualism is the prominent feature in school work. That spirit is dying out and the spirit of centralization is taking its place. The aim used to be to make an individual, now it is to make a citizen. The aim of the School County is to make citizens. History is now taught on the constructive basis: first, the country, then events, enabling the pupil to trace from cause to effect.

In the primary school the study of nature must of necessity be emphasized because the pupils have not yet reached the age for productive enterprises. In the grammar school productive work, i. e., woodwork, cooking, sewing and lacework, are introduced. The test of such work is by actual use. Work not complete is not in any true sense educative. There is no working out of models and plans.

Child Drank Gin and is Dead.

Honolulu, March 3:—Alexander C. Robertson, aged three years and four months, the youngest son of Archibald S. and Eliza S. Robertson, died at 2:57 this morning, as a result of a fall on Sunday afternoon and some gin that he had taken yesterday morning which was in a cocktail glass from the top of the ice chest, mistaking it for water.

The little fellow got up before his parents did yesterday morning, and feeling thirsty and not wanting to disturb them saw the liquor on the ice box and took some.

He evidently drank considerably, as he came in a few seconds later to his parent's room and fell unconscious on the floor. His father lifted him up and placed him in bed, all efforts to wake him proving futile.

Dr. Hodgins, the family doctor, was called in and gave the child some tablets, expecting that he would be all right after a little while. The child lay unconscious all morning, and when the parents saw that the child was no better in the early afternoon sent for Dr. Hodgins again. He came out but was unable to revive him to consciousness.

About 5 o'clock the little fellow was taken with severe convulsions, which lasted until quite late in the evening. Dr. Murray was called in and arrived about six o'clock, but it was then too late to save him.

It was then told the family by some neighbors that the child had received a bad fall on Sunday afternoon from his bicycle. When Dr. Murray heard this he saw that heroic measures would have to be taken to save the child, who was still unconscious and in the throes of convulsions.

He worked over the child until eight o'clock when Dr. Hodgins also arrived. It was found that the child's lungs were full of water, and that nothing could be done but to wait. Hypodermic injections of morphine and other drugs were constantly used all night in a vain attempt to relieve the child, and to bring him back to consciousness, but to no avail. The child died at time mentioned without ever regaining consciousness.

His father stated this morning that the child had been subject to convulsions for some months back, but that he had never been used to taking gin or any other liquor.

The funeral will be held this afternoon at three-thirty from St. Andrew's Cathedral, the Rev. E. T. Simpson conducting the services. The interment will be in the Nuanu cemetery.

It is needless to say that Joy will continue to eat poi and pitch for the local team in Honolulu during the season of 1908.
